

A message received from Rocky Batra an AMROITE of first batch 2000-2003

When I first decided to join Amro I had little idea of which path my future was heading to, but after joining Amro I realised the right path for my career. After all the hard work I am delighted the way everything has worked out for me. Today I am running my own business called Chowk its a small cafe and takeaway and one of the most liked dinning out places in Leeds/Bradford, Chowk would not have been possible without Amro, so I would like to thank the entire team of Amro for all the help and development I have received. Finally would advise anyone interested in the food industry to finish their studies before getting into the field, because education will open more doors. The hospitality industry includes work in hotel or restaurant kitchens, dining rooms, or in food chains. It encompasses import, export, supermarkets, farming, fishing, foraging, and agriculture in general. All of these jobs have one thing in common: food. So, someone who doesn't know which part of the field to get into should start with actual training in food, which will be relevant and important for any aspect of the field.
